Risk Advisory

The aim of the risk advisory service we provide is to forecast the possibility of certain events occurring and identify scenarios that may take place if those events occur, allowing our clients to develop plans and strategies to deal with such situations, examples include:

- Political risk assessment: Political risk assessment basically deals with understanding local political scenarios and circumstances and how they might affect an economic sector or the general political landscape of a country.In an election year, this could be interpreted as understanding how one candidate would act compared to another candidate if they won. In other circumstances, it could be the analysis of potential policy changes in one domain e.g mining, or the assessment of the potential spread of militant activity from one region to the next.

- Security advisory: Security advisories may be geographic or situational and offered as a periodic review or on-going service. This includes active threat and security monitoring within a country or region that might affect personnel or operations.

- Opinion Analysis: Sourcing of public and private opinions regarding events or scenarios to better understand sentiments that are indicative of risk. How would a particular product or brand be perceived in a market? What are the opinions of policy influencers towards proposed legislation?

- Scenario Mapping: An essential aspect of the strategic planning toolkit, scenario mapping aims at understanding how future hypothetical or actual events may play out and how best to deal with each specific eventuality or a series of such eventualities.

- Cyber threat analysis: Cyber threats have been recognised in the business of risk as an emerging and significant area of concern, owing to the global dependence on Internet-based networks and digital systems. This service aims to identify risks to our clients from this domain of concern.
